Introducing...

ATLANTIS THE ROYAL

Widely recognised for its feats of architecture and illustrious establishments, Dubai certainly doesn't do things by halves. And this might just be its most soaring and extravagant venture yet...

Look to the new

Making its mark on the skyline in 2023, Atlantis The Royal is an architectural feat that promises a whole new, and honestly quite staggering, level of modern opulence. The magnitude of the resort is enthralling enough – rectangular blocks stacked symmetrically stand 43 storeys high and house an eye-opening 90 plus swimming pools in total across resort and residences. The expansive infinity Sky Pool and sky-terraces bring about an indoor/outdoor living, normally associated with low-rise mansions, up from the ground and into cantilevered towers above the gulf.

TRAVEL NOTES:

- ✦ 795 rooms, suites and signature penthouses
- ✦ The largest stretch of privately owned beachfront in Dubai
- ✦ 17 restaurants and bars and an unprecedented collection of celebrity chefs under one roof, including Heston Blumenthal, José Andrés, Costas Spiliadis and Ariana Bundy
- ✦ 5,000 sq metre wellness centre with an outdoor yoga lawn
- ✦ Access to activities and experiences at sister property Atlantis, The Palm including Aquaventure Waterpark and The Lost Chambers Aquarium

An awe-inspiring showstopper

Wanting The Palm's most anticipated opening to date to be larger than life yet considerate from the get-go, the architects behind this striking structure set out to be both unique and mindful of the impact a soaring tower has on the horizon. Coming up with a design to compliment Dubai's futuristic skyline instead of overtaking it.

The lobby sets the tone, with electrifying jellyfish by the thousands and a towering 'Droplets' sculpture, symbolising the first drop of rain in a dry desert, catching the eye. While the innovative Skyblaze fountain outside steals the show erupting into bursts of aqua and flame. That's the theme throughout the hotel, the unconventional marriage of fire and water. Another is the unrestrained 24 carat gilded floors and walls dotted throughout, juxtaposing meticulously handcrafted interiors designed by five hand-picked local women – think delicate porcelain pieces, the finest textiles and bespoke embroidery.

Elements Terrace

Redefining Dubai's luxury scene

In a city that has become rapidly synonymous with the finer things in life, Atlantis The Royal came to the table with the intention to be the most talked about around town. There's no shyness; it aims to be the biggest and best, to shock and awe, and to surprise at every turn.

Everyone here is made to feel like a "someone"; from the annual Dubai devotees who check into the capacious private suites for a home-away-from-home in hotter climes, to the beautiful twilight crowd that mill around sipping champagne at the rooftop Cloud 22, with its private cabanas and light features reminiscent of the fictional world of Pandora.

Families are also seen roaming the grounds – with a plethora of restaurants to appease fussy eaters and access to neighbouring Atlantis, The Palm's kid-approved activities why wouldn't they be? But these tend to be the clans who want to escape the hubbub in favour of somewhere quieter yet still with the ability to take their breath away.

Estiatorio Milos

Gourmet glee

With 17 restaurants (eight of which are helmed by celebrity chefs) exceptional food is a given, but dining here goes beyond the everyday. It's where artistry, alchemy and ambiance combine to push culinary experiences – and tastebuds – to the next level.

Like in Dinner by Heston Blumenthal where a playful and puzzlingly convincing mandarin masquerades as a sphere of chicken liver parfait, or in Jaleo by José Andrés, the only chef to have a two Michelin-star restaurant, four Bib Gourmands and a Nobel Peace Prize. There's also seafood joints Estiatorio Milos by acclaimed chef Costas Spiliadis and La Mar by Gastón Acurio, serving wild oysters plucked from the Aegean and Peruvian ceviche and sashimi style tiraditos respectively. Ariana's Persian Kitchen has time-honoured Iranian classics with a twist by Ariana Bundy, and for something sweet, there's Mich Turner's Little Venice Cake Company, which has baked indulgent creations layered in icing.

Grown-up playgrounds

Extending beyond the foodie-sphere, some dining venues moonlight as zestful bars. During the day, Nobu by the Beach is the place to sunbathe as live music wafts on the breeze and come sun down, a private lift ride opens up to 23rd floor restaurant Ling Ling. Evolving from drinking to dining to dancing (not necessarily in that order), the ambiance is defined by the mood lighting, the faint Pan Asian aromas from the kitchen and the views through the 180-degree windows; either out to the Arabian Sea or to Cloud 22's Sky Pool that hangs 90 metres off the ground with Dubai's twinkling skyline in the distance.

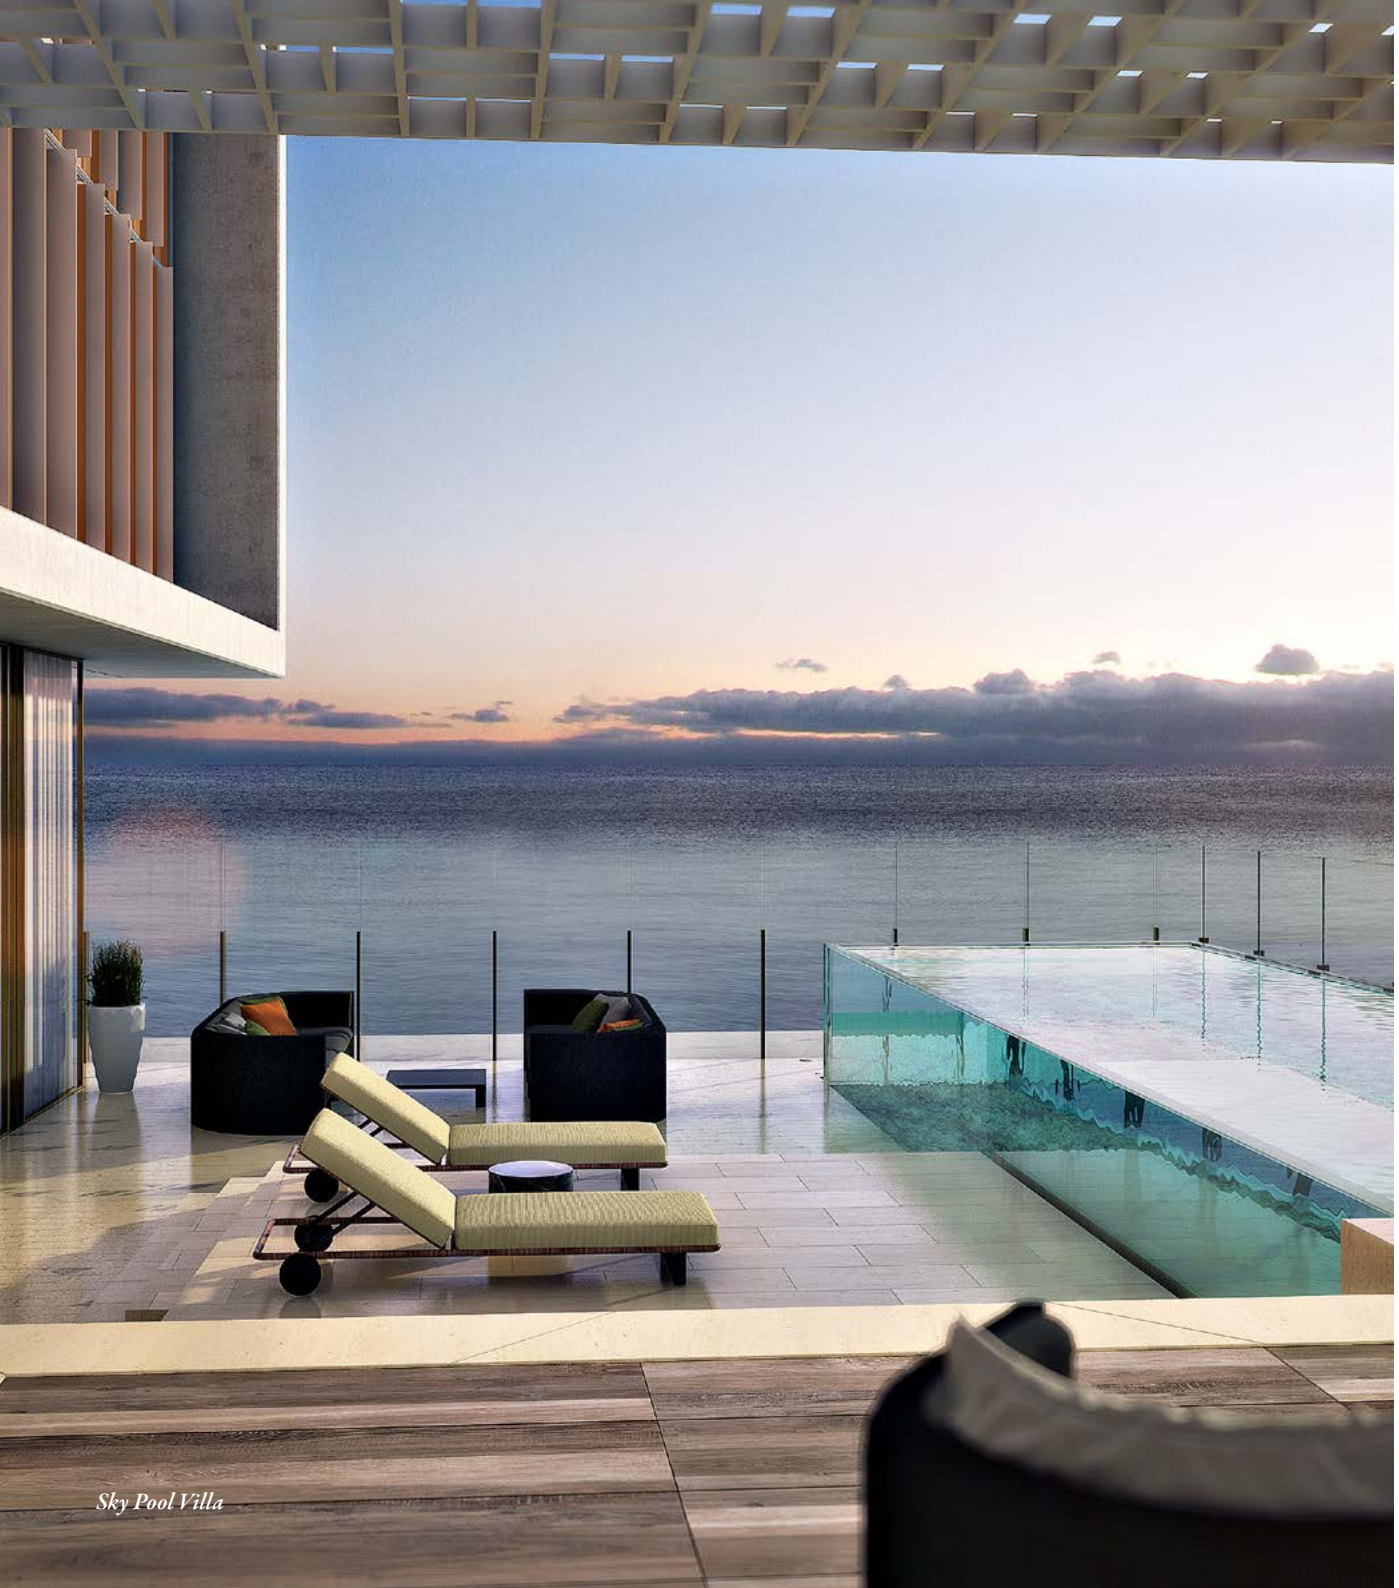

Spa struck

While all the excitement lingers in the upper floors, down at ground level it's a far more tranquil affair. At almost the size of a football pitch, the spa's spaciousness alone provides the feeling of quiet solitude.

Harnessing state of the art technologies, a personal journey is created for each guest incorporating all the elements; fire for the mind, nature for the body, water for emotions and air for the spirit. Some of these elements even make it into the 17 treatment rooms in the form of fireplaces and floor-to-ceiling fish tanks. There's also a snow sauna to improve circulation, Halotherapy Salt Caves for allergies, a traditional six room Hammam Sensorium, and a Chromotherapy Lounge where the light spectrum is used to heal.

Room with a view

Reinventing the traditional guesthouse concept, Atlantis The Royal aims to create a community with a strong sense of home. The result is a residence and hotel concept that combines the best aspects of urban city living and a beachfront holiday resort. With even the lead in rooms being the size of some apartments, it's difficult to single out which of these spaces are the most exclusive.

The signature penthouses are designed to impress; accentuated by massive terraces and private pools and spanning over multiple floors. With a desire to be the hosts'-with-the-most to multi-gens or groups, they're a private, rare kind of luxury for Dubai. Suites are like home but taken up a notch; there's no need to leave bed for breakfast as it's delivered to you complimentary, and if you're struggling to decide what to do at any given time of day, a personal butler is on hand to put together a few surprises. The Sky Pool Villa in particular is a talented illusionist, using its all-glass infinity pool to create the feeling of swimming in the clouds.
